COUNTRY STYLE

If you live in the country, as DIANNE LLOYD does, you have to have a country style. Which means that you have your own way of climbing gates and fences.

Town birds wait for someone to come along and open a locked gate, or they give up and go home. Dianne scales a gate with nerve and lovely legs, and for the information of those who didn't pay attention in school, nerve means a spot of dashing skin.

Dianne, a secretary, lives near the New Forest. That's where Rufus, son of William the Conqueror was accidentally killed while hunting, and a stone marks the spot. Dianne herself nearly got bagged by a deerstalker once. She interrupted his apologies by asking him how on earth he could mistake her for a deer.

"As a matter of fact," he said, "you look an absolute derring. Could we have tea together?"

Those deerstalkers need watching all the time,

FOCUS ON A DOLLY

A dolly is a bird both young and endearing.

Like ELAINE MASTERS.

Age, seventeen. Measurements, 36-23-36. Elevation, five feet five. Sum total, enchantment.

Interests, good books, pop music, Spain, France and London. Work, salesgirl. Ambitions, oh just a sports car and a horse. Spare time hobby, being a pin-up girl.

Effect, she makes this mixed-up world look as if it's got a future, after all.
